

Andy Cottrill

Andy is a Managing Director of Q5, leading the US office operating out of New York. He has over 8 years of experience working as a consultant across multiple industry sectors with a background in management consultancy. He specializes in working alongside clients to solve business problems and drive cultural change.

After working in Accenture's financial services division, Andy joined the Civil Service Fast Stream graduate program, where he led a number of projects covering violent crime policy, immigration, counter terrorism and policing. More recently Andy has been advising start-up firms on how best to structure and scale-up their business models to sustainably grow their organizations.

Andy also took some time to lead an expedition of volunteers in Borneo on a construction project: building a gravity fed water supply to provide fresh, clean water to two rural villages.

Andy lives in the East Village in New York. He keeps active by playing squash, football and cycling, but increasingly finds himself watching sports more than participating in them. As a former ski-bum, Andy still tries to make a fool of himself on the slopes whenever he can.